Mission Statement

The Ford Foundation is a resource for innovative people and institutions worldwide. Our goals are to:

- ▶ Strengthen democratic values,
- ▶ Reduce poverty and injustice,
- ▶ Promote international cooperation and
- ▶ Advance human achievement

This has been our purpose for more than half a century.

A fundamental challenge facing every society is to create political, economic and social systems that promote peace, human welfare and the sustainability of the environment on which life depends. We believe that the best way to meet this challenge is to encourage initiatives by those living and working closest to where problems are located; to promote collaboration among the nonprofit, government and business sectors, and to ensure participation by men and women from diverse communities and at all levels of society. In our experience, such activities help build common understanding, enhance excellence, enable people to improve their lives and reinforce their commitment to society.

The Ford Foundation is one source of support for these activities. We work mainly by making grants or loans that build knowledge and strengthen organizations and networks. Since our financial resources are modest in comparison with societal needs, we focus on a limited number of problem areas and program strategies within our broad goals.

Founded in 1936, the foundation operated as a local philanthropy in the state of Michigan until 1950, when it expanded to become a national and international foundation. Since its inception it has been an independent, nonprofit, nongovernmental organization. It has provided more than $10 billion in grants and loans. These funds derive from an investment portfolio that began with gifts and bequests of Ford Motor Company stock by Henry and Edsel Ford. The foundation no longer owns Ford Motor Company stock, and its diversified portfolio is managed to provide a perpetual source of support for the foundation's programs and operations.

The Trustees of the foundation set policy and delegate authority to the president and senior staff for the foundation's grant making and operations. Program officers in the United States, Africa, the Middle East, Asia, Latin America and Russia explore opportunities to pursue the foundation's goals, formulate strategies and recommend proposals for funding.

President's Message

In 2001 the Ford Foundation and the Institute for International Education (I.I.E.) launched the largest single initiative in the foundation's history—the Ford Foundation International Fellowships Program (I.F.P.). This 10-year, $330 million program has two parts. Through the International Fellowships Fund (I.F.F.), a new entity established by Ford and I.I.E., the program will provide approximately 3,500 graduate fellowships for disadvantaged individuals with academic promise and proven leadership capacity, for study anywhere in the world for up to three years. Ford will also make complementary grants to strengthen overseas undergraduate institutions' ability to recruit and prepare traditionally excluded groups for opportunities of this sort.

The I.F.P. responds to the world's need for new generations of outstanding leaders with direct knowledge of some of their societies' worst problems and inequities, and a sense of moral urgency about them. Such leaders will need more than talent, good ideas and determination, crucial as these qualities are. Many will also need the analytic skills, social networks and know-how that can come from advanced professional or interdisciplinary education, and from the diversity of thought and experience now found on many of the world's university campuses. Because the I.F.P. uses a variety of innovative recruitment and selection procedures to reach its target groups, and because fellowships can be such a crucial strategy for personal and national development, I want to describe what the I.F.P.'s first year has involved.

The program seeks academically talented men and women who would not normally have the opportunity for graduate study, whether because of geographic isolation, family poverty or discrimination based on gender, ethnicity, physical disability or other factors. The I.F.P.'s dual focus on talent and social exclusion, combined with the freedom to study anywhere in the world, was noted by experts in each country as nearly unique and challenging to implement. A decentralized operation and partnerships with experienced regional, national and international organizations have been key to addressing the challenges. In each location, three organizations combined forces to make the program work as intended: the I.F.F., its local partner organization, and a local Ford Foundation office (see table on page 4).

Outreach and selection processes combined knowledge of best practices as well as new techniques designed to find hidden talent. In Vietnam, for example, nominators sought out women and ethnic minority people known to be good students and social innovators, particularly those involved in rural economic and social development. Each person who requested information was counseled about the application and selection process. This was particularly important for some of the most socially isolated applicants who initially believed they had little to say about themselves and had seldom been asked what they wanted to study and do with their lives. Counseling also helped overcome worries about moving ahead of family and friends or gaining government approval for study overseas. This unusual investment in all applicants helped level the playing field for a very rigorous selection process. An international five-member selection committee reviewed the final applications, examining interview notes from the semifinal rounds. They looked for evidence that the applicants had overcome barriers to higher education, showed significant social commitment and linked their study plans to community improvement work after the fellowship.

In Mexico and Guatemala, partner organizations familiar with indigenous communities made repeated visits to indigenous areas, encouraging promising candidates to apply. In Nigeria, Senegal and Ghana, NGOs and news media announcements helped reach women, ethnic minority communities and members of poor families, especially those in rural areas. Beyond academic ability, final selection emphasized leadership potential as reflected in successful community service. In Chile and Peru, selectors looked for academic talent in “persons affected by social exclusion” such as poverty, residence in remote provinces and education in public schools and universities rather than the more prestigious private institutions. They focused on performance in the last two years of the normal baccalaureate program, recognizing that talented students often overcome early academic problems with hard work, good instruction and mentoring.

In India, announcements in 15 major-language publications, English-language dailies and the Internet were supplemented by sending recruiters to rural areas to describe the program and by mailing more than 1,000 letters to remote regional nominators. Selection emphasized academic talent and social exclusion as assessed by factors such as the type of schooling (language of instruction, rural, etc.), parental occupation and education, caste, gender and disability. A member of the national selection panel met with each finalist for an informal chat over tea or coffee before the interview, trying to set the applicant at ease and provide a familiar face at the interview table. Candidates were encouraged to express themselves in the language of their choice with translation provided as necessary. In China, by contrast, within a similar broad outreach a fundamental selection criterion was a basic level of proficiency in English, now necessary for admission into high-quality Chinese as well as many foreign universities.

In every location, several rounds of screening and oversight by academics and practitioners ensured a careful and transparent selection process. Nonetheless, final selection was often difficult for panels accustomed to awarding fellowships exclusively on the basis of academic performance. Panelists worked hard to find the right balance between academic and leadership potential and to define social exclusion. Selection processes will continue to be refined as the program evolves and as the advisers gain experience with the complexity and subjectivity of a culturally sensitive approach.

Once selected, I.F.P. fellows unfamiliar with academic study options are offered advice on graduate schools and assisted with application routines. Not surprisingly, second-language skills have influenced options for graduate placement. Some foreign-language instruction is available for the fellows, as is training in computer and research skills, and all will take part in networking activities designed to provide personal support and a powerful sense of belonging to an international leadership cohort. All are eligible for modest funds to expand professional horizons while studying, see family members and later resume work in their countries upon completion of study. A common data collection system follows the fellowship recipients during and after the program, providing the basis for evaluation of the I.F.P. and research on international higher education.

The results of the I.F.P.'s initial phase vindicate its ambitions. The attributes of its first cohort are shown on the opposite page. Notably: 56 percent are female, 76 percent were recruited from outside major cities and 50 percent are members of ethnic minority groups. Without question, I.F.P. has tapped into a reservoir of talented people who would otherwise have very limited chances for advanced study. In fact, it is painfully clear that many more of the finalists than the I.F.P. could fund were fully qualified—a powerful reminder that if education is to be a catalyst for development, societies must find ways to reach more of this deep but hidden talent pool. I hope the I.F.P. can begin to generate a broad discussion about that possibility and how to pursue it. As the program matures, it may also offer other donors a way to invest in these populations.

I have met with many I.F.P. fellows, a few of whom are presented in the next pages. I am impressed with their ambitions and abilities, the extraordinary obstacles many have overcome, and their determination to seize this opportunity to help build just and fair societies. The I.F.P. experience to date suggests that such people abound in marginalized communities.

María Félix Quezada, a member of the Hñahñu ethnic group, grew up in a rural community in the Hidalgo region of Mexico and became a teacher in a rural school in Ixmiquilpan. She plans to study population and demography in Mexico, and has a special interest in migration issues and the history of her rural community. Speaking at a gathering of Mexico's first I.F.P. fellows, she said: "From the time you are born into an indigenous community society points a finger. Not everybody does this, only those who still think and practice a dichotomy: superiority and inferiority of races. To these people you represent the other, the Indian boy or girl, poverty, the illiterate. In short, an obstacle for the development of the country.... They blame you for your backwardness, your stubbornness to maintain and defend the resources of mother nature...."

"I had many difficulties entering school. My parents did not have enough money to support my studies, and they discouraged me from studying because I was the only girl of five children. I financed my studies with scholarships, by working and with money from my migrant brothers...."

"There was a time when I decided to hide my indigenous roots to avoid aggression... However, I realized that it was a mistake to adopt a different personality... it did not feel good to reject what characterized me as a human being and an Indian.... I later retook my identity and proclaimed it with pride.... I am proud to be the first woman in my community to graduate from a university."

"When the community learned I was studying, I was excluded from work in the fields because people thought that this was no longer appropriate" for a student. They thought I had forgotten how to harvest corn, cut vegetables, etc. They assumed that I did not want to know anything about our traditions. Little by little, I convinced them that they were wrong, that despite my acquired knowledge I still was an indigenous woman and that my training always included my community, my ethnic group and my region.

“Unfortunately, there are few of us who enter the academic world; it is not an easy task. This struggle is not some kind of natural selection. Those of us who are already in the academic world are not better or stronger than the rest of our indigenous brothers. In fact, they are the principal motivation of this constant search for academic knowledge. What we accomplish is through them and for them.”

Ilja Viktorov from Yekaterinburg, Russia, grew up in a low-income, single parent family and started his higher education at Irkutsk State University in Eastern Siberia and graduated from Urals State University. With I.F.P. support, he is working for a Ph.D. in economic history at Stockholm University. He writes: “As for my passion for Sweden, it is hard to understand why it attracted me... Perhaps it was Astrid Lindgren’s fairy-tales... The land seemed to be romantic and somewhat mysterious... I decided to study Sweden’s history from the very beginning of my undergraduate studies.... I realized that it should not only be interesting to me but also useful to others.... I believe that some forms of economic democracy can be practiced in Russian firms.... The main thing, however, that fascinates me in the Swedish experience is that the Swedes have managed to create a comprehensive social state and preserve an effective market economy.

“I plan to organize a Swedish centre in a newly created Faculty of International Relations at the Urals State University.... The interest in Sweden among Russians is enormous, although the majority of the population sees the Swedish experience as rather unrealistic.... What I have learned during my studies of Sweden, and especially after these months in the country, is that one can understand best one’s own country only when one tries to understand another culture and look at the world from another point of view.”

Vo Thi Hoang Yen, Vice President of the Youth Association for the Disabled in Vietnam, wrote in her application: "I am the youngest of the family of five children who lived in a remote village where people earned a living by working in small rice fields and raising poultry. Almost all children dropped out of school early. Basic health services were insufficient. By my third birthday, polio had taken away my first walking steps." Later, she was asked how she overcame so many challenges, and she replied, "I often had a feeling that I had been struggling in the violent current to get onto some peaceful bank but had always been whirled away by fierce waves. What kept me from sinking into the bottom of depression? It is love and unhappiness.

"It is my Mom's unconditioned love for her children. It is her life of sacrifice for our education. It is her unending worry for her youngest child, the vulnerable one with disability. It is the love and support from my sisters who, not influenced by the common perception of our society, strongly believed that their youngest sister is not without capability.

"It is the memories of the childhood full of unhappiness: fire, bombs, war, deaths and hunger; the ash pile of our house. It is the image of my mom saving up each rare seed of rice during years of poor harvest to help her children get on with study. It is the so-called miserable destiny of the countryside women. It is the suffering of the families with five or six children with disabilities due to agent orange or the lack of vaccines.

"Yes, it is love that encourages me to overcome all the difficulties and to live a meaningful life. It is unhappiness that helps increase my understanding and open my heart to the disadvantaged. Love and unhappiness nurture in me the aspiration to work for the unlucky, to assist them to build a better life....

"I am studying Human Development at the University of Kansas, where I have found the close relationship between professors and students and that the professors give students much freedom and support to develop their ability.Other students in the research group have also given me much assistance and encouragement.... The more I study, the more I feel interested."

Vo Thi Hoang Yen at the University of Kansas.

Aaron Mushengyezi, from the Rufumbira ethnic group in Uganda, grew up in a remote rural area. He walked great distances each day to attend grade school and ultimately gained admission to Makerere University, where he was the first undergraduate student in 20 years to win a First Class degree in Literature. At the university he attained the post of Lecturer while being involved in children's literature and women writers' projects, an AIDS Operation Rescue Club and family support services. He will use his I.F.P. fellowship to study for a doctorate in English and Comparative Literature either in Great Britain or the United States.

He commented in his application: "Ugandans have been traumatized by the political turmoil the country has gone through since independence... One of the legacies of this turmoil was the death of a reading and writing culture in the country. It was not until the last decade that a 'renaissance' has taken place, resulting in incredible literary production in works of fiction, theatre for development and the media... Furthermore, following the launching of the Universal Primary Education Program a few years ago, there is an insatiable demand for reading materials in the schools. This is bound to grow with Universal Secondary Education in the next couple of years... My proposed doctoral research will ... be the first of its kind to provide vital criticism of the works of emerging Ugandan writers."

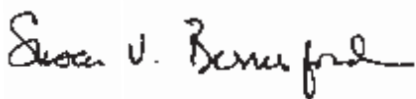

Time will tell how well these appealing, committed and talented people will do in graduate school and in later leadership roles. On the basis of Ford's experience with past fellowships, it is fair to predict that a significant number will emerge in their communities, in local, regional and national organizations, and on a global stage. As they do, it will be in part because of their own motivation and unique talents, but it will also reflect the creative efforts of the program's recruiters, selectors and managers to locate hidden reservoirs of human potential and tap into them—affirmative action at its best.

I expect many of the I.F.P. fellows, remembering what others have done for them, will urge that every man, woman or child's dignity and potential to achieve be recognized. I particularly hope they will speak about the values that gave them the courage to struggle against great odds and how they acquired those values for themselves. Their stories can prompt each of us to recognize the difficulties so many talented people face. My colleagues and I share the hope that the fellows will bring closer to reality our shared vision of just and stable societies around the world.

On September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon brought death, injury and hardship to thousands of people. Immediately after these attacks, the Ford Foundation worked closely with people and organizations responding to the emergency, loaned staff to the newly created September 11th Fund and made a total of $11.2 million in emergency grants. A list of these projects is shown on page 25. Each check for these grants was accompanied by a book of signatures of hundreds of Ford Foundation staff members in our 14 offices worldwide who wanted to express their personal support for the grantees in this difficult time. In addition to the emergency grants, drawn from the foundation's reserve funds, grants addressing longer-term issues and problems related to the September 11 events continue in 2002.

Frances Fergusson, President of Vassar College, retired from our board this year after a full 12 years of service. She brought to the foundation a deep understanding of scholarship and educational reform, artistic sensibility and broad cultural interests, helping us to deepen our work in these domains and to see the connections between them both in the United States and around the globe. We will miss the wise counsel and range of experience that made her such a valuable trustee and colleague.

The staff list reflects the organization of the foundation as of Jan. 31, 2002.

The Foundation Responds

Emergency grants in response to the September 11, 2001 attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

The September 11 Fund $5 million

The fund, set up as a specific response to the World Trade Center disaster, is jointly administered by the New York Community Trust and the United Way of New York City. It distributes money through intermediary organizations to individuals, small and midsize businesses and nonprofit groups directly affected by the attack.

The Legal Aid Society $1 million

To help the agency handle increased demand for legal services to low-income people affected by the World Trade Center disaster. Their legal issues relate to housing, health insurance, unemployment benefits, small-business recovery and survivor benefits.

The Fund for the City of New York $1 million

For cash-flow loans to nonprofit organizations based in lower Manhattan and facing financial difficulties because of the attack.

Seedco (Structured Employment Economic Development Corporation) $1 million

For loans, grants and technical assistance to small businesses located near the World Trade Center that suffered serious losses not covered by city, state or federal programs.

The Nonprofit Finance Fund $1 million

For financial and advisory assistance to nonprofit organizations in lower Manhattan that suffered physical damage and financial losses because of the attack and whose needs were not fully met by other funds.

The WNYC Foundation $1 million

To help New York City's leading public radio station replace a transmitter destroyed in the attack and restore full broadcast service to the greater metropolitan area.

The Washington Regional Association of Grantmakers $1.2 million

To help nonprofit organizations respond to an increased need for counseling and other support services for individuals and families affected by the attack on the Pentagon. Funds are also being used to enhance coordination among donors and service providers working on community recovery problems.

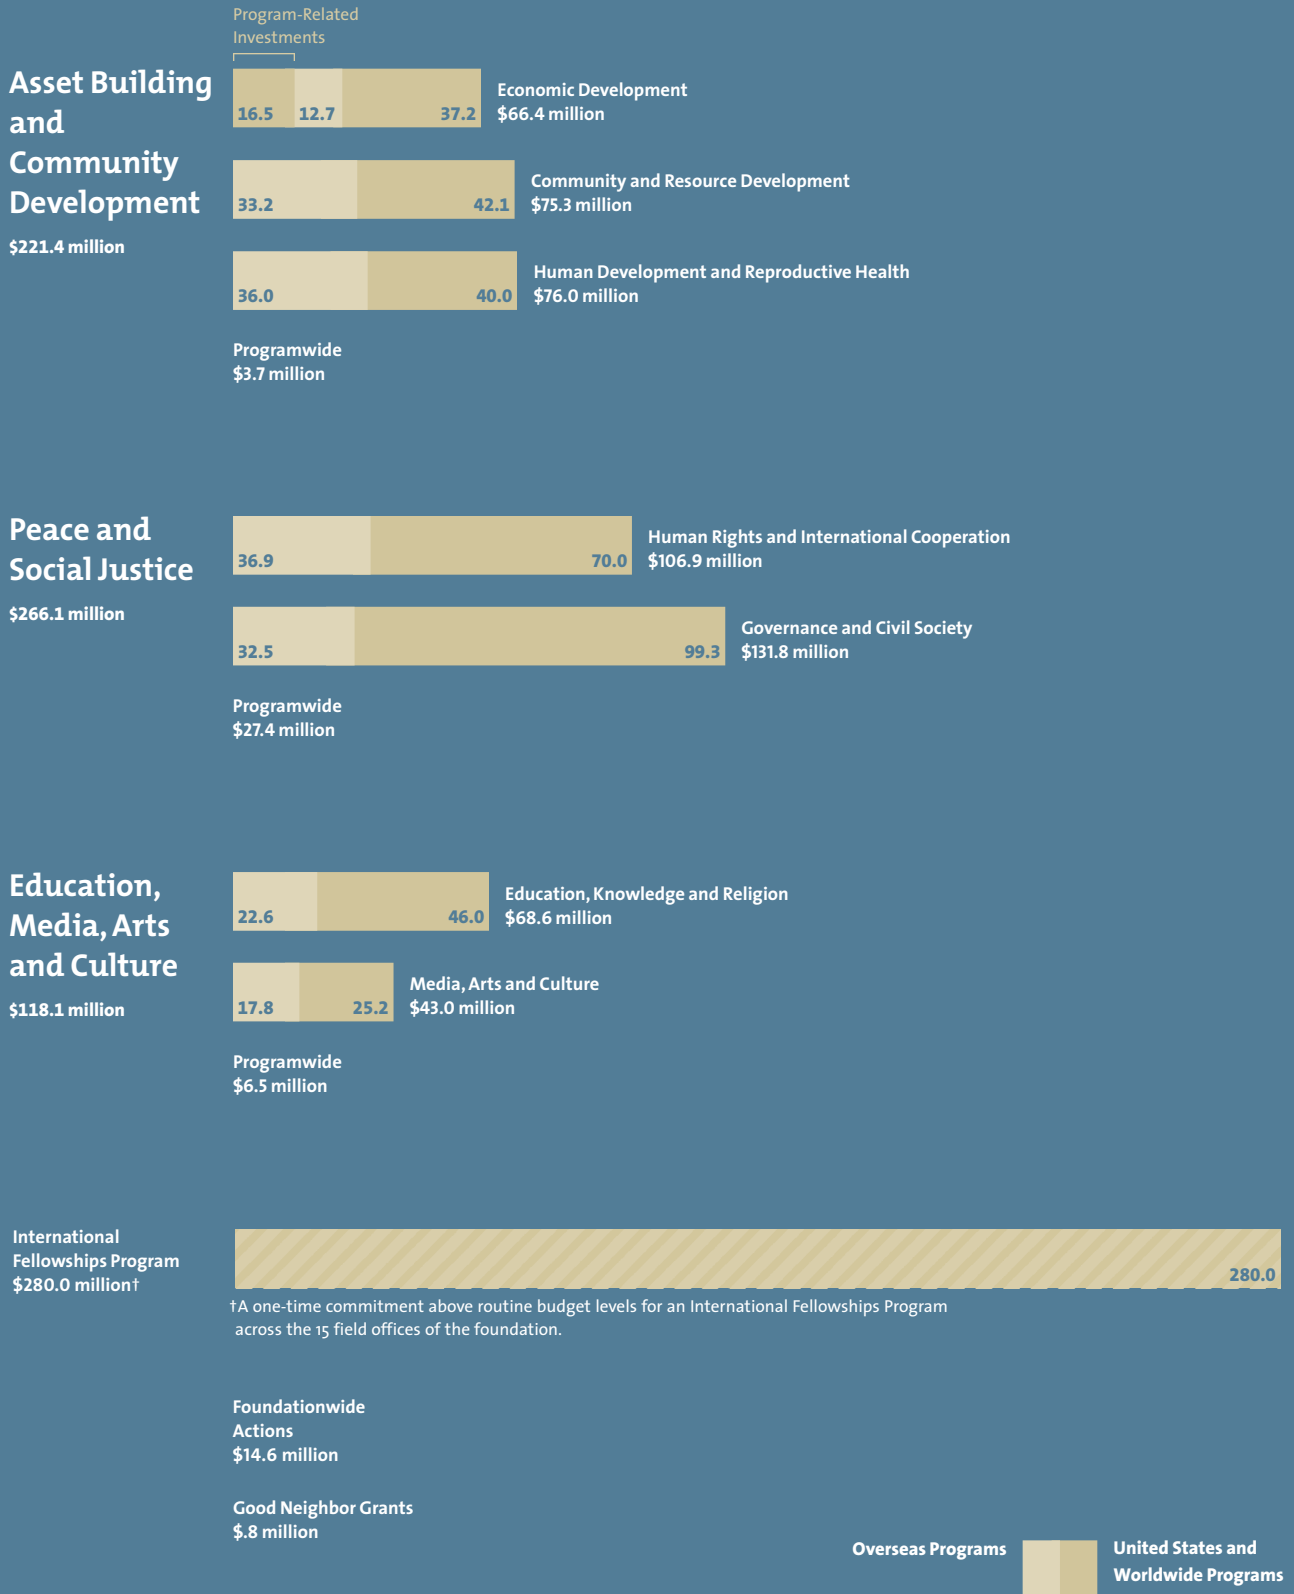

Members of the Ford Foundation staff gather to sign pages that were presented to each September 11th grantee as an expression of support.

Asset Building and Community Development

Ford Foundation Annual Report 2001

Land, Trees, Air, Water — and People

Melvin L. Oliver, Vice President, Asset Building and Community Development

Much of the world's population depends on livelihoods derived from natural resources: land, forest, water and the air we breathe. The continued degradation and diminution of these resources threaten the economic and social security of individuals, communities and countries, as well as the intricate web of ecological, social, economic and cultural relations that binds the global community. As farmers lose the ability to produce crops and raise livestock due to environmental degradation and insecure land tenure, as communities dependent on forests see them destroyed, as drought parches previously productive areas, urban centers swell with millions of destitute migrants who join the growing ranks of the underemployed. All too often, these urban centers become unhealthy receptacles of human and industrial toxic waste while the poor and disenfranchised become likely targets for ideologies of hate and violence. When mobilized they can, as we have tragically seen in recent months, threaten national and global security. The challenge is to transform natural resources into assets that sustain global economic viability and provide a healthy environment for future generations. That happens only as the poor and disenfranchised become true "stakeholders" in their societies.

At the "Earth Summit" in Rio de Janeiro 10 years ago, governments pledged to support a comprehensive plan of action to improve the quality of life for all the world's people in ways that preserve the ecosystems on which life depends. Transforming natural resources into assets depends on individuals or communities securing access to them, whether individually or collectively. Rights and responsibilities must be clear and of significant duration. To be productive, a resource must be properly managed, enriched and harvested responsibly. It should also be the kind of resource to which production processes can add value. And it should be passed along in an ecologically resilient and productive condition to ensure its viability for the next generation.

A striking large-scale example is in place in the state of Acre in western Brazil. There, the deep and productive bond between residents and the Amazon rainforest is being restored after decades of rainforest destruction to make room for cattle and other agricultural investments. In January 1999, the 600,000 citizens of Acre, including 40 indigenous groups, voted into power a government committed to stewardship of the rainforest and its communities. This "Government of the Forest," emerged as a result of a powerful social justice movement; it nurtures the region's resources as valuable assets to be tended for common benefit.

The changes followed tragedy. In the city of Xapuri, just before Christmas 1988, gunmen assassinated Chico Mendes, the renowned leader of the movement to reclaim the rainforest for its people. What began as protests by rubber tappers spread throughout the region into a call to save the rainforest from destruction by cattle ranching, agribusiness and logging. Chico Mendes gained international recognition as the leader of mass resistance to government policies that laid waste to forestland and threatened indigenous cultures. The movement had its own proposals for preservation, but Mendes was murdered before these ideas could be put into effect.

Now, the Government of the Forest has enacted comprehensive initiatives to improve the region's economy and environment. "The program has a clear goal, to combat poverty and create jobs through sustainable development of forest resources," says Gilberto Siqueira, the government's secretary of planning. "Through these assets we wish to establish a new entrepreneurial and modern culture."

The achievements are remarkable. Rubber tappers now harvest rubber sustainably from "extractive reserves" controlled by local production groups. An agricultural cooperative of 375 small-scale farmers diversifies crop production and improves market access for rubber, nuts and other sustainably harvested products. The Federal University of Acre's 100-hectare Zoobotanic Park serves as a "living laboratory" for researchers and students in natural resource management and sustainable development. A worker-owned rubber processing plant has increased production by 500 percent and earned certification for producing the best quality natural rubber in the country. The plant's success led to a contract with Pirelli Tire Company and to development of a facility to produce 200 million condoms per year. In addition, a major expansion of a Brazil-nut processing plant and a new furniture-making venture based on certified wood are providing jobs and income. The forest once again belongs to the people, and they share in its management, its benefits and its continued viability.

"We have a long way to go," observes Acre Governor Jorge Viana. "But what we have done in Acre, thank God, is something everyone wants to do, turn dreams into reality."

In September 2002, the United Nations will convene the World Summit on Sustainable Development in Johannesburg, South Africa, a follow-up to the Earth Summit. As we plan for this event, we should keep in mind that in order for individual examples of asset building to be effective they require key support on several levels. International agreements that equalize the flow of benefits from the "South" to the "North" and that correct for the massive consumption of resources in the industrialized North are paramount. In this sense, the decision of the United States not to subscribe to the Kyoto accords on global warming has hindered local efforts in the global South. New institutional arrangements, new policy frameworks and new coalitions are necessary. Public-private partnerships, similar to those for wood certification, are key to increasing the value of products harvested and produced in sustainable ways. Finally, success depends on the local stakeholders being truly empowered to manage their resources and participate in important decisions about their lives.

The foundation will continue to support the remarkable efforts of local communities to convert their resources into assets. At the same time, we will support those who want to build a system of rules to help globalization do more to improve the lives of the poor. And finally, we will support organizations and social movements that blend the goals of environmental protection, social justice and economic opportunity.

Asset Building and Community Development

The Asset Building and Community Development program helps strengthen and increase the effectiveness of people and organizations working to find solutions to problems of poverty and injustice. Sixty-five staff members focus grant resources on six fields in three program units in New York and abroad.

We support people who leverage human, social, financial and environmental assets to promote social change. Grants support vibrant and robust social movements, institutions and partnerships that analyze contemporary social and economic needs and devise responses to them.

Human Development and Reproductive Health

The Human Development and Reproductive Health unit, led by Virginia Davis Floyd, director, and Helen R. Neuborne, deputy director, coordinates efforts to build human assets while strengthening the relationships and social networks that people need to improve their lives. We work in two fields to accomplish these goals:

With children, youth and families we support organizations and promote policies that help families mobilize human and social assets to overcome poverty and discrimination.

In sexuality and reproductive health we focus on the social, cultural and economic factors that affect sexuality and reproductive health. Emphasis is given to nongovernmental organizations, researchers and government agencies acting on the expanded understanding of sexuality and reproductive health reached at major United Nations conferences in the last decade. A primary concern is empowering women to participate in improving reproductive health and related policies.

Economic Development

The Economic Development unit, led by Frank F. DeGiovanni, director, and Lisa A. Mensah, deputy director, seeks to make durable economic improvements in the lives of the disadvantaged. The unit coordinates efforts in two fields:

In development finance and economic security we support organizations that help businesses create employment opportunities and help low-income people acquire, develop and maintain savings, investments, businesses, homes, land and other assets.

In work-force development we support organizations that help improve the ways low-income people develop marketable job skills and acquire and retain reliable employment that provides livable wages.

Community and Resource Development

The Community and Resource Development unit, led by Cynthia Duncan, director, and Jeffrey Y. Campbell, deputy director, coordinates work in two fields that aim to create conditions for the development of sustainable and equitable communities.

In environment and development we help people and groups acquire, protect and improve land, water, forests, wildlife and other natural assets in ways that help reduce poverty and injustice.

In community development we seek to improve the quality of life and opportunities for positive change in urban and rural communities. We support community-based institutions that mobilize and leverage philanthropic capital, investment capital, social capital and natural resources in a responsible and fair manner.

In all these units, grant making is also helping to establish and fortify organizations and institutions that support asset building through research, training, policy analysis and advocacy.

Grant making aims to help low-income people and communities build the financial, human, social and natural resource assets they need to overcome poverty and injustice. By supporting and building strong fields, we will be able to continue devising strategies appropriate to new situations. Elizabeth C. Campbell, the senior director of the Asset Building and Community Development program, is responsible for helping our staff members develop and share what we have learned in our work.

Children, Youth and Families

The Ford Foundation supports organizations and policies that enable low-income families to improve their lives.

Members of a women's discussion group in Esteli, a city in the Nicaraguan highlands, talk about ways to prevent and cope with youth suicide. The group receives assistance from Foundation Points of Encounter for Changes in Daily Life, a Managua-based organization that engages in television programming, training and community networking to strengthen social support systems and services for Nicaraguan youth and families.

In Lagos, students from Bariga Comprehensive High School paint a mural for a competition held by Action Health, Inc., a Nigerian organization that promotes reproductive health and youth development. The competition, whose theme was "Mirror on the Wall," reflects Action Health's mission to provide young people with the information, education, skills and services they need to gain greater power over their lives.

A U.S. Marine Corps couple with their daughter at the day-care center operated by Fort George G. Meade near Washington, D.C., part of a major effort by the U.S. Department of Defense to provide good child-care services at military installations. The National Women's Law Center focused on the program in a report entitled Be All That We Can Be: Lessons from the Military for Improving Our Nation's Child Care System.

Sexuality and Reproductive Health

The foundation's work in sexuality and reproductive health supports civil society organizations that promote public debate of these issues.

These teenagers at the Pilot City Health Center in Minneapolis are part of a national initiative to promote understanding of human sexuality, particularly as it relates to adolescent development. With support from the Academy for Educational Development, the center (like similar community-based organizations in Oklahoma City and Seattle) is working closely with the local health department to redefine public education about sexuality, reduce teen pregnancy and curb the transmission of sexually transmitted diseases.

(Right) A new program at the Health Center of District 6, which serves a poor section of Ho Chi Minh City, Vietnam, helps homeless people and unregistered migrants gain access to public health services, which usually require proof of registration or legal residence. The center now offers all local residents sexual, reproductive and primary health care, often making use of peer education, counseling and services. To promote their entry into the economic mainstream, it also provides clients with help obtaining legal residency and registration and offers small loans to help boost their incomes.

The project is noted for its integrated approach to social change and economic development.

Development Finance and Economic Security

The foundation believes that good jobs, savings, home equity, businesses and other financial assets are important sources of stability for families.

(Above) Thousands of Cleveland residents are finding it easier to save for important life goals, like going to college or buying a home, with help from the Consumer Federation of America. To promote savings among the city's least affluent households, the federation launched a pilot program last year that includes community organizing, financial counseling and new savings opportunities at local banks. The program is gearing up for a possible national expansion.

Foundation (Development of Humane Action). DHAN works with the poorest of the poor, including many illiterate and low-caste women, and empowers them to own and manage their own financial institutions. So far the kalanjams have mobilized $2.8 million in savings from members and leveraged another $3.6 million from state and commercial banks.

The program, among the first of its kind in China, includes research and outreach to increase understanding of microenterprise. Its rapid growth and high repayment rates have already shown that microenterprise programs can reach poor households on a sustainable basis and without government assistance.

Work-Force Development

The foundation supports efforts that enable the disadvantaged to develop marketable skills and to find and retain jobs that pay decent wages.

The institute is working to retrain the local work force for good jobs in growing industries with support from the National Network of Sector Partners, an alliance of business, labor, government, education and community organizations. The network, staffed by the National Economic Development and Law Center in Oakland, Calif., promotes job training in regional growth industries, where wages and benefits can move individuals and families out of poverty.

Environment and Development

The primary goal of the foundation's work in the environment and development field is to protect and restore natural resources while improving livelihoods for low-income people.

(Top) Children in Chhatis Mauja, Nepal, in a canal that was part of a major upgrade of the area's irrigation system. Community Development

The foundation supports efforts by institutions—churches, schools, nongovernmental organizations and local foundations—to increase opportunities in rural and urban communities.

Leadership for a Changing World

Leadership for a Changing World, a program of the Ford Foundation in partnership with the Washington-based Advocacy Institute and the Robert F. Wagner Graduate School of Public Service at New York University, recognizes 20 individuals or organizations each year for their effective responses to social problems in communities across the United States. The winners receive $100,000 each to advance their work and an additional $30,000 to strengthen their skills and for other supporting activities over the next two years. Photos of other L.C.W. winners in 2001 appear on pages 64 and 82.

Barbara Miller, Director of the Silver Valley People's Action Coalition in Kellog, Idaho, won an L.C.W. award for mobilizing residents to force the cleanup of contamination caused by mining. She also created a network of health and policy officials who are examining the residual effects of lead poisoning on public health throughout the Northwest.

Systems of Justice, and Freedom

Bradford K. Smith, Vice President, Peace and Social Justice

I had been working in Brazil for many years when, in September 1992, the Congress charged President Fernando Collor de Mello with corruption and voted to initiate impeachment proceedings. Aristedes Junqueira, Chief Federal Prosecutor, spoke for the nation when he said: “For the first time we have a chance to resolve a political crisis in line with the constitution and without armed soldiers.” Brazil’s fragile democratic institutions proved strong enough to bring Collor—the first democratically elected President in 29 years—to justice.

That experience profoundly shaped my own thinking about the role of justice in society. The rule of law could hardly be assumed in Brazil. Initial euphoria at the end of dictatorship quickly turned to despair as a series of corruption scandals reinforced Brazilians’ belief that the wealthy and powerful, when exposed, escaped any sanction. Collor’s impeachment was a turning point, a clear sign that the public valued justice and demanded it of the government. It also made it clear that a functioning system of justice was absolutely essential to the redemocratization of Brazil.

Brazil is hardly unique; similar histories have been written in many parts of the world and may yet be written in others. Justice and democracy are inseparable, and though some societies have tried to put justice “on hold” while pursuing economic development, they have found that development, too, is not sustainable without justice. Everywhere the foundation works, the struggle to create just societies depends on the behavior of the courts, the police and the prisons.

In December 1999, after violent clashes between Muslims and Christian Copts in the Egyptian town of El Koshesh, Muslims were arrested, tried and found guilty, but given extraordinarily light sentences. The Coptic Church appealed with the support of Egypt’s General Prosecutor, and a higher court is currently reviewing the case. Human rights activists played a critical role in challenging the government’s version of the clashes. The following year, in a separate case, the Court of Appeals declared illegal the attempts of government authorities to take over several Islamist-led professional associations. In the absence of strong political parties, unions or NGOs, Egyptian society looks increasingly to the justice sector to mediate sensitive disputes.

In China, courts have traditionally been viewed as an extension of the government’s administrative bureaucracy. The political and legal committees of Party organs at various levels intervene in specific cases, as do national, provincial, municipal and local people’s congresses and their delegates. Judges are often poorly trained and paid and vulnerable to bribes. Many in China are therefore working to improve the independence and quality of the judicial system. Elsewhere in Asia nongovernmental networks are bringing cases of corruption to public knowledge and monitoring the legal process. The Indonesian Forum for Transparency in Budgets assures that funds allocated by the central government are used by local authorities in optimal ways. Police Watch, based in Jakarta, cooperates with the local police to improve their human rights track record. In the Philippines, Tanggol Kalikasan, a public interest law firm, is working with the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to ensure enforcement of environmental protection laws.

In East Africa, the Kenyan judiciary has long proved unable or unwilling to act independently when faced with major abuses of citizens' human rights. However, judicial reform is under way there and in neighboring Uganda. After years of advocacy by NGOs, the Kenyan Chief Justice in 2001 set up a Family Court to dispense justice quickly in cases of domestic violence, juvenile offenses and disputes over inheritance of property by women and children.

Serious attempts to reform the judiciary have been under way in many Latin American countries for a number of years. Chile's Criminal Procedural Law, in which Diego Portales University works with a number of NGOs, has played an instrumental role in such efforts. For many Latin Americans, especially the poor, ideas about justice are formed through contact with the police. And that contact can be frightening. According to one Brazilian study, in 1999 Rio de Janeiro police were responsible for 82 percent of the 1,148 "death-squad" executions of young men reported by the media. Yet the northern state of Amapa has gained national recognition for providing new models for police training in youth detention centers. And in the state of Pernambuco an NGO—the Gabinete de Assessoria Jurídica às Organizações Populares—pioneered a widely replicated program to protect witnesses (primarily from the police).

In Russia, police are rated for their success in solving crimes, which leads many to register crimes or complaints that they see as easily solvable and use excessive force to extract confessions from suspects. The common practice of holding those undergoing preliminary investigation or awaiting trial (even juveniles detained for petty crimes) results in overcrowded prisons, illness (especially tuberculosis) and even death from asphyxiation or hunger. These conditions have put justice sector reform on the public policy agenda. The jury system—currently operating in only a few regions—will soon be extended to the entire country. And the Russian Prison Administration has joined forces with NGOs in a campaign to change the Criminal Code and provide judges with alternatives to detention for those convicted of less serious crimes.

The United States has long relied on a strong justice system to uphold its constitutional democracy, yet African-Americans and Latinos are grossly overrepresented and poorly treated in its criminal justice system. Increasingly prisons are populated by minorities and aliens that American society has chosen to warehouse rather than embrace as full citizens. The last decade has seen challenges to the independence of the American judiciary as well, as Congress has stripped federal courts of the authority to decide important questions of immigration, criminal and Native American tribal law.

As globalization advances, the quest for justice seeks legal instruments that transcend national borders. In early 2000, Egypt's Supreme Constitutional Court struck down a new law restricting activities of NGOs; the court acted in response to arguments that the law was unconstitutional and breached the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Political and Civil Rights. "Universal Jurisdiction" entered the global lexicon in 1998 when Augusto Pinochet was arrested in London following an extradition request from Spain, where a prosecutor, acting on evidence presented by Chilean immigrants and others, brought human rights charges against the former dictator. And the International Criminal Court was expected to be ratified by 60 nations sometime in 2002, becoming a reality despite opposition from the United States government.

Whether it is the American Civil Liberties Union, supported since 1975, or the Nigerian Center for Law Enforcement Education, a grantee since its creation in 1998, the foundation has a deep and ongoing commitment to organizations that strive for justice. The Peace and Social Justice Program is currently launching a new effort to stimulate grants that will encourage democratic reforms of the entire justice sector—police, prisons and the courts—around the world. Though conceived prior to the events of September 11, these efforts have gained even greater urgency as societies around the world are tempted to sacrifice due process for national security. The need for strong and independent justice systems—to bring global criminals to trial while safeguarding civil liberties—has never been more pressing.

Peace and Social Justice

The 21st century offers humankind the prospect of a peaceful, prosperous and cooperative global order—the historic possibility that globalization can be a force for the common good. But this vision will go unrealized unless we redouble our efforts to deepen democracy, strengthen citizen participation, combat discrimination and foster true international cooperation.

These issues drive the work of the Ford Foundation's Peace and Social Justice program, a network of some 50 staff members in two program units based in New York and our offices overseas.

Human Rights and International Cooperation

The Human Rights and International Cooperation unit coordinates efforts in two fields:

In human rights we promote access to justice and the protection of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights.

In international cooperation we encourage cooperation between nations toward a more peaceful and equitable international order based on pluralism and tolerance.

The unit, led by Alan Jenkins, director, and Taryn Higashi, deputy director, supports organizations working on international human rights as well as the rights of women, members of minority groups and refugees. New initiatives are exploring diverse approaches to achieving reconciliation and justice at the end of a period of massive crimes against human rights. Grant making focuses on the International Criminal Court as well as discrete efforts in countries as diverse as Nigeria, Argentina, Indonesia, Russia and South Africa. Grants for international cooperation focus on foreign policy, resolving conflicts, encouraging peace-making and curbing nuclear proliferation.

New work is fostering greater recognition of developing-country economic issues in the regulation of global markets and the decision making of multilateral institutions like the International Monetary Fund and the World Trade Organization.

Governance and Civil Society

The second unit, Governance and Civil Society, also works in two fields:

In governance we foster effective, transparent, accountable and responsible governmental institutions guided by the rule of law and dedicated to reducing inequality.

In civil society our goal is to strengthen the civic and political participation of people and groups in charting the future of their societies.

Under the leadership of Michael A. Edwards, director, and Urvashi Vaid, deputy director, the unit supports efforts to improve government performance, build public awareness of budget and tax issues and confront the challenges posed by government decentralization. To address concerns about electoral reform, campaign finance, voting and women in politics, a new grant-making emphasis will focus on political equality in America. Through work on civil society, grants will seek to increase participation in public affairs beyond voting while strengthening civil society organizations and the practice of philanthropy needed to guarantee their long-term sustainability. Another new grant-making portfolio focuses on global civil society and on the role of transnational citizens' coalitions in addressing the world's pressing social problems.

Natalia Kanem, as the senior director of the Peace and Social Justice program, is responsible for encouraging new areas of grant making and helping staff members to document and share the knowledge gained through our work among staff, grantees and others. One example of this commitment is the Budget and Fiscal Analysis Network (BFAN), which facilitates learning, capacity building and the sharing of experience across 20 countries on how citizens can promote transparency, accountability and participation in government budgeting. In a similar vein, the foundation recently established the Network on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights to help advocates, government officials and NGOs develop ways to enforce these new categories of rights.

Human Rights

The foundation is concerned with human rights for all throughout the world. It takes a special interest in the rights of women, members of minority groups and refugees.

Civic activists from around the world, including this supporter of the rights of Afro-Brazilians, received video training and equipment to document their experience with racial discrimination as well as their participation in the United Nations World Conference Against Racism, Racial

The project, a statewide alliance led by Greater Birmingham Ministries, has also developed and advanced a vision of public policy called the "Quality of Life" agenda. Its chief goal is to increase citizen participation, particularly among low-income and minority populations, in the policy-making process.

Civil Society

The foundation tries to strengthen institutions that form the backbone of civic life. These include nongovernmental organizations, neighborhood groups and religious associations.

Nicaragua's indigenous people, including this mother and her child in Bilwi, are gaining access to public policy debates through workshops and continuing education programs at the University of the Autonomous Regions of the Caribbean Coast of Nicaragua. The university was founded in 1995 to address the unique social and economic needs of the region's indigenous and ethnic communities. Taking its mission outside the classroom, it is helping local residents gain a stronger voice in national dialogues on poverty alleviation and regional development.

As members of the National Religious Leadership Roundtable, Debra Kolodny, Rev. Ken South and Abdullah are working to build bridges in U.S. civil society. The roundtable is an interfaith network that promotes greater understanding, equality and respect for gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender people. The organization, which began meeting in 1998 under the aegis of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force Foundation, also promotes respect for religious diversity within the gay community.

Local News, Global News

Alison R. Bernstein, Vice President, Education, Media, Arts and Culture

Last fall, millions of people across the United States watched a five-hour prime time public television series called, “Local News.” Unlike previous blockbuster shows like “The Civil War” or “Baseball,” this one was not about history or mass culture, both popular public television subjects. Instead, the series focused on a contemporary topic that few Americans have thought much about—what makes local TV news good, bad or mostly just mediocre? The show’s producers spent 10 months recording daily life at a Charlotte, North Carolina, local TV news operation that was trying to break free of the “if it bleeds, it leads” philosophy. The documentary’s theme was not exactly the stuff of high ratings but, as one media critic put it, “if ‘Local News’ were fiction, it would be the most promising new dramatic series of the fall.”

The series, funded in part by the Ford Foundation, was engrossing and revealing—a new kind of reality TV. “Local News” made clear that in the United States, one of the least regulated media environments in the world, journalists work in a highly competitive and profit-oriented atmosphere that often causes them to emphasize sensational and lurid news. But the dramatic tension in the series, and in real life, exists because the TV reporters in Charlotte had chosen journalism for honorable reasons, believing that the news media are not just businesses but also hold an important place of public trust in a democratic society. The reporters and the filmmakers who followed them for nearly a year rejected the view that the financial bottom line is incompatible with high-quality journalism.

The journalists in “Local News,” like journalists everywhere, believe that the news media have a profound effect on society. They can shine a light on the lives of minority, poor and disenfranchised communities; they can serve as civic watchdogs, holding government agencies and other institutions accountable; and they can “connect the dots” and help citizens understand that the “local” is part of a more national or international context. As day-to-day life grows more complex, and as global communities become more interdependent, the news media’s ability to report on events truthfully, accurately and fairly becomes even more critical. Moreover, in democratic systems, the news media help citizens obtain the information they need to make informed decisions and voice their concerns. Since last September 11, the news media’s role in responding to the public’s urgent need for information seems more important than ever.

Given this context, the foundation’s Education, Media, Arts and Culture program is devoting more resources, both financial and human, to create environments that enable journalists to do their jobs more effectively, more ethically and with greater attention to the needs of citizens. This increased focus on the news media does not take place just in the United States. Foundation staff in our overseas offices are also providing support to reporters, editors, educators and professional journalism associations for efforts to improve the role, performance and diversification of the news media.

In Russia, for example, staff are working with grantees who are rethinking the role of journalists. Soviet journalism formerly was a vehicle for propaganda, and the news media were centralized and tightly controlled by government. Now, with Russia's shift to a market economy, a transformation of the news media is under way. Newspapers and electronic media, originally state financed, have been bought by financial groups, banks and large conglomerates. It's not clear how open to diverse perspectives this new environment will be. In response to new challenges brought about by privatization, the foundation supports grantees like Internews, which provides technical assistance and diverse programming for independent cable TV stations, and the House of Journalism, Russia's leading membership organization for journalists, which has developed ethics seminars for reporters and editors. Although the Russian context is different from that of the United States, the goals of the foundation's initiatives in each country are similar—to cultivate more open and civic-minded media.

In West Africa, the foundation's efforts to improve news media practices face different challenges. Despite the enormous potential of electronic communication, information flows between and within countries in the region are skewed because the news is reported in English, French and Portuguese, the languages of former colonial powers, as well as in local languages. In addition, news and information about neighboring countries are obtained from global news agencies like Reuters, CNN, Agence France-Press and the BBC, which tend to ignore local news and diverse cultural perspectives. One foundation grantee, the West Africa Radio Pluralism Project, counters this homogenization by helping stations cover local events in various languages and with a variety of programming.

Among the greatest challenges facing the news media in a country like Nigeria, Africa's most populous nation, are draconian statutes governing libel, sedition and contempt. Such laws can "criminalize" media content and may obstruct a citizen's access to public information. Even so, there are hopeful signs. As Nigeria has moved from dictatorship toward democracy, urban areas have become more open environments for the news media, though rural communities have yet to experience the same level of pluralism. Thus, the foundation's news media work in Nigeria focuses on reaching underserved populations, especially rural women.

The African Radio Drama Association and the Independent Television Producers Association have received funds to generate more local news in various tribal languages, particularly for the growing number of new community-based radio stations. Although these stations are still largely governmentally owned and controlled, there are opportunities in the current political environment to give citizens greater access to diverse viewpoints in the news and information they receive.

In Ghana, community radio broadcasting is becoming a major force. In 1999, 10 out of approximately 35 independent stations were either rural or community based. The foundation-funded Ghana Community Radio Network enables communities to participate fully in dialogues and decision-making forums, giving them a voice in the debates over economic, political and cultural changes likely to affect their lives. This network therefore does more than bring more diverse news stories to the community; it also serves as a venue for democratic citizenship.

The EMAC program's growing engagement with the news media reflects a heightened sense of the media's importance around the world. The news media not only transmit information and culture; they also decide what information is important. In that way, they help to shape culture and values. Put another way, the news media serve as the "miner's canary." If the media cannot breathe freely, there probably isn't much oxygen left for the rest of us.

Education, Media, Arts and Culture

The Education, Media, Arts and Culture program focuses on strengthening the roles leaders in these sectors play in broadening knowledge, opportunity, creativity and freedom of expression. Nearly 30 staff members pursue these goals in two program units in our New York headquarters and in our overseas offices.

Education, Knowledge and Religion

The Education, Knowledge and Religion unit, led by Janice Petrovich, director, and Joseph A. Aguerrebere, deputy director, seeks to enhance educational opportunity, especially for low-income and chronically disadvantaged groups, and to address the challenges of diversity using interdisciplinary and collaborative approaches. The unit works in three fields to pursue these goals:

In education reform we seek to enhance the capacity of schools and higher education institutions to broaden access while pursuing higher levels of student achievement, especially for historically underserved groups. In this way, we help reduce poverty and inequality by promoting better educational practices for all students.

In higher education and scholarship our goal is to expand knowledge and deepen scholarship, curriculum and public understanding of pluralism and identity. We support social science training as a means of educating a new generation of leaders and scholars who can be more effective in their civic roles, helping to chart the future of their societies.

In religion, society and culture we are pursuing a deeper understanding of religion as a powerful force in contemporary life and a resource for strengthening the cultural values and social practices that support democracy, human achievement, justice, equity and cooperation.

Media, Arts and Culture

The Media, Arts and Culture unit, headed by Margaret B. Wilkerson, director, and Jon Funabiki, deputy director, seeks to strengthen the arts and media as important contributors to the communities and societies in which they function. The unit works in two fields to accomplish these goals:

In media our work aims to promote free and responsible news media and to develop infrastructures that serve the civic needs of society and its diverse constituencies. In addition, we support the development of media policy and high-quality productions that enrich public dialogue on such issues as building democratic values and pluralism.

In arts and culture our goal is to strengthen opportunities for artistic creativity and cultural expression that will generate the hope, understanding, courage and confidence necessary to help citizens fulfill their potential.

The senior director for the Education, Media, Arts and Culture program, Kenneth B. Wilson, is responsible for helping staff members worldwide work together to learn what is effective and why, and then sharing these lessons with foundation grantees and wider communities of interest.

Education Reform

The Foundation looks for ways to broaden educational opportunities, especially for students from historically underserved groups. Ford supports programs that promote civic participation, enhance teacher preparation and nurture partnerships that help children succeed.

These elementary school pupils in the Philippines are benefiting from an effort to improve English and math proficiency among first and second graders in Bulacan Province. Known as Project JOSIE (Joint Systems Improvement in Education), it brings together school administrators, teachers and parents as well as NGOs and universities. In its first year, the project retrained 620 teachers, developed new workbooks for students, held support sessions for parents and won a commitment from the secretary of education to provide more textbooks and build more schools in the province.

DC Voice, a coalition of parents, teachers and school administrators in Washington, D.C., is exploring ways to achieve comprehensive, systemic education reform in the nation's capital. With support from the Network of Educators on the Americas, it seeks to build a broad constituency for quality teaching and to create vital family-school partnerships.

These Chilean students are learning about local flowers, herbs and vegetables at a community center in Valparaiso, a city known for its steep hills and historic seaport. Their school has begun to incorporate local heritage and history into the curriculum, and improve teaching practices, with support from the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization. The initiative is helping kindergarten and primary school students in Valparaiso and Chiloe provinces give meaning and value to local culture.

These students at the Alexandrina Pitta School in Salvador, on Brazil's northeast coast, are exploring questions of race and inequality with support from the Centre for Afro-Oriental Studies. The center, located at the Federal University of Bahia, trains municipal teachers and rebroadcasts television programs designed to reach adolescents who have dropped out of elementary school.

Higher Education and Scholarship

The foundation tries to illuminate the way changing economic and political contexts around the world influence colleges and universities. It is also examining issues of access, equity and globalization in higher education.

This brick-making venture is one of many local enterprises receiving support from the University of Namibia's new branch in the northern city of Oshakati. The branch, which opened in 1998, has 1,400 students enrolled in continuing education classes and degree programs designed to foster skills and knowledge needed to advance the country's development.

Deborah Rosenfelt, Bonnie Thornton Dill and Sharon Harley helped establish the Consortium on Race, Gender and Ethnicity, a new alliance of scholars at the University of Maryland who are exploring overlapping interests in women's studies and Afro-American studies. The consortium promotes collaborative and interdisciplinary work.

Minority students at a science class at South Oak Cliff High School in Dallas. In response to a 1998 federal court ruling that eliminated race-sensitive admissions policies in Texas's higher education system, scholars at Princeton University's Office of Population Research have been measuring the impact on minority admissions and retention. The long-term study aims to contribute to the national policy debate on affirmative action in higher education.

Religion, Society and Culture

The foundation believes that religion can be a resource for strengthening democracy, pluralism and individual achievement.

(Left) Ismail Haidara inherited thousands of ancient manuscripts, including rare Islamic texts from the 14th century, from his family in Timbuktu, once an important economic and cultural crossroads on the edge of the Sahara desert. Together with scholars at the Institute for the Study of Islamic Thought in Africa, which is based at Northwestern University in Chicago, he is working to preserve, catalog and analyze these manuscripts without removing them from their home in Mali. The texts are shedding new light on the history of Islam, Africa and even slavery in the Americas.

(Above) Elaine Pagels, the scholar of religion, in her office at Princeton University. She is at work on a book about Christianity and religious pluralism.

Patients and family members engage in a healing ceremony sponsored by the Boston Healing Landscape Project. The project, started by doctors at the Boston University School of Medicine, seeks to integrate the study of religious values and belief systems into medical education in order to deliver care that is responsive to the cultural and religious backgrounds of patients. The project's initial focus is on healing systems of African diaspora communities in Boston.

The vibrant life of the Janpath market, in the heart of New Delhi, is the subject of a new documentary about village artisans who are making their mark in India's cities. The program was produced by the Public Service Broadcasting Trust, a new radio and television venture that addresses civic concerns in India. The trust, which was established in 2000, produces documentaries and educational programs on issues like gender, development, the environment, health and schools.

Media

The foundation's media unit supports productions that explore such social issues as democracy and women's rights. It also helps journalists and news organizations maintain high standards.

(Above) These Nigerian women in the northern state of Kano formed a radio listeners' club so they could hear broadcasts on agriculture and health and keep up with global events. The club receives support from the Women Farmers Association of Nigeria, which is helping rural communities gain a stronger voice in public policy issues. The initiative, like similar efforts in Ghana and Sierra Leone, draws on the experiences of the Federation of African Media Women, which pioneered the use of radio to advance development in southern Africa.

(Below) Anuradha Vittachi, a Sri Lankan journalist based in London, is a cofounder of oneworld.net, an Internet portal devoted to news and commentary on public affairs. The One World International Foundation is working to enhance the site's editorial content with insightful media analysis and criticism and thorough coverage of international events like the World Economic Forum.

Arts and Culture

The foundation is committed to strengthening arts and cultural organizations around the world. It also finds ways for artists and scholars to pursue new projects.

Students at the Yunnan College of Nationalities in southwestern China practice the Peacock Dance, a traditional favorite among the Dai people. To enhance the cultural traditions of the many ethnic minorities that inhabit Yunnan Province, the college is strengthening its programs in art and dance and creating a new one in music. It recently opened studios in 10 outlying villages where instructors can learn more about local traditions, and it routinely invites ethnic artisans to teach at the main campus in Kunming.

(Top) A new stage adaptation of “Moby Dick” by the Perseverance Theatre in Douglas, Alaska, draws on native Alaskan whaling culture in its retelling of Melville’s story. The theater is one of 32 U.S. arts and cultural organizations working to advance public dialogue on important civic issues with support from the Animating Democracy Initiative. The initiative was started in 1999 by Americans for the Arts, an alliance of local arts agencies throughout the United States.

(Bottom) Musicians in Indonesia rehearse a composition in the gambang kromong tradition, an amalgam of Indonesian, Chinese and European sounds that originated in Old Jakarta. The ensemble receives support from Yayasan Asosiasi Tradisi Lisan (the Association for Oral Tradition), which is working to revitalize traditional forms of music, theater and oral literature of the country’s many different ethnic groups.

Leadership for a Changing World

Leadership for a Changing World, a program of the Ford Foundation in partnership with the Washington-based Advocacy Institute and the Robert F. Wagner Graduate School of Public Service at New York University, recognizes 20 individuals or organizations each year for their effective responses to social problems in communities across the United States. The winners receive $100,000 each to advance their work and an additional $30,000 to strengthen their skills and for other supporting activities over the next two years. Photos of other L.C.W. winners in 2001 appear on pages 48 and 64.

Bill Rauch, Artistic Director and Co-founder of the Cornerstone Theater in Los Angeles, Calif., won an L.C.W. award for joining talents of professional artists with local amateurs to create theater pieces that deal with community concerns. Cornerstone productions have addressed the need for AIDS education in rural Virginia, de facto school segregation in Mississippi and racial profiling in Los Angeles. (Above right) a scene from "Peter Pan," featuring residents of a community in Ohio; (bottom right) residents of Los Angeles neighborhoods perform in "For Her or to Go?," a production that celebrated Cornerstone's 15th anniversary.

Program-Related Investments

Fiscal Year 2001 Approvals

Program-related investments (PRIs) are usually loans, although they may also be loan guarantees or equity investments. The primary purpose of these investments is to help meet the credit needs of organizations in low-income communities that lack capital to finance important projects. The distinguishing feature of PRIs is that, unlike grants, they are recoverable.

PRIs help recipients close credit gaps, leverage additional financing from other public and private sources, and accumulate assets. In this way, they help build strong, sustainable development organizations.

Introduction to Financial Statements

Budget and Investment Policy

The foundation's budget and investment policies are intended to serve the foundation's basic charitable and educational purposes. It is anticipated that for many years to come, the foundation will play an important role in addressing societal problems and challenges in the United States and around the world. This role includes helping to develop, test and support new ideas and innovative projects. To enable the foundation to continue to perform this function and to effectively pursue multiyear programs and strategies, the foundation tries to invest and budget in ways that produce relatively smooth spending patterns over time and avoid sharp drops in spending from year to year, while preserving the real value of the investment portfolio.

The foundation budgets on a two-year cycle. The foundation's budget is based on two benchmarks. The first is an internally derived formula equal to 5.8 percent of the average value of the investment portfolio over the previous 36-month period. The second benchmark is the spending level that is adequate to satisfy both the federally mandated payout requirement and the special distribution requirement that enables the foundation to convert excise tax savings into additional grant disbursements. For many years, foundation spending has exceeded the federally mandated payout requirement (5 percent of average asset value). Occasionally the foundation will exceed both benchmarks to address a unique program opportunity. In fiscal 2001 the foundation launched the International Fellowships Program (I.F.P.) and made $280 million in grants related to this major initiative. As a result, the foundation's qualifying distribution exceeded 7.2 percent of its average asset value in fiscal 2001.

The foundation maintains a balanced and diversified portfolio that includes equities and fixed income securities (both U.S. and international), private equities, venture capital and equity partnerships.

Investments

The foundation's investment portfolio was valued at $10.7 billion at the end of fiscal 2001 versus $14.5 billion at the close of fiscal 2000. The portfolio rate of return was -20.3 percent for the fiscal year and +10.7 percent annualized for the past three years. The returns for the three-, five- and ten-year periods are all in excess of our primary investment objective of a 5 percent real rate of return.

Fiscal 2001 was a poor year for equity markets globally due to the rapid decline in economic growth and the resulting poor earnings performance. The tragic events of September 11, 2001 also had a negative impact on the markets because of the increase in economic uncertainty for the intermediate term. In the U.S., the S&P 500 lost 26.6 percent and non-U.S. equities, as measured by the MSCI-EAFE Index declined by 28.5 percent. The foundation's U.S. and international equities outperformed these indices. The slowing economy and a reassessment of the prospects for many segments of the technology industry negatively impacted the valuation of the Private Equity portfolio. Our fixed income portfolio gained 10.4% return as interest rates declined due to lower inflation and sharply lower short-term interest rates.

Income and Expenditures

Total realized income, including capital gains, amounted to $992 million in fiscal 2001, compared with $2,432 million in fiscal 2000. Dividends and interest income totaled $343 million, or $22 million above fiscal 2000. Total program activities (primarily grants to organizations and individuals, direct charitable activities and program support) were $931 million, representing an increase of $216 million over the previous year. General management expenditures were $25 million, representing a 4.6 percent increase over the previous year. Expenses incurred in the production of income were $29 million.

Program-Related Investments (PRIs)

Each year the foundation invests a portion of its endowment in projects that advance philanthropic purposes in various areas of the foundation's interest. (See list, page 119.) The Trustees have earmarked up to $180 million of the corpus for these investments. The investments are in the form of debt or equity financing or loan guarantees. As of September 30, 2001, $134.6 million in investments and $115,000 in guarantees were outstanding and $26.2 million in funding commitments were in process.

During the fiscal year, new PRI loan commitments of $16.5 million were made, and $12.3 million were disbursed. Principal repayments of $12.9 million and investment income of $1.3 million were received. The following table summarizes the PRI program for fiscal years 2001 and 2000.

Federal Excise Tax and Payout Requirement

The Internal Revenue Code imposes on private foundations an excise tax equal to 2 percent on net investment income (principally interest, dividends and net realized capital gains, less expenses incurred in the production of investment income). This tax is reduced to 1 percent when the foundation meets certain distribution requirements. In fiscal 2001 the foundation was again able to satisfy the distribution requirement and thus reduce the excise tax from 2 percent to 1 percent by converting the tax savings into additional qualifying distributions (grant payments). For fiscal 2001 the tax is estimated to be $9.7 million, excluding the deferred portion of excise taxes resulting from unrealized appreciation/depreciation on investments. Since fiscal 1971 the foundation has incurred federal excise taxes of $227 million.

The Internal Revenue Code also requires private foundations annually to disburse approximately 5 percent of the market value of investment assets, less the federal excise tax. The payout requirement may be satisfied by payments for grants, program-related investments, direct conduct of charitable activities and certain administrative expenses. The foundation had qualifying distributions of $939.1 million in fiscal 2001, exceeding the federally mandated payout requirement by $288.3 million. During the past five years the foundation has made $3.3 billion in qualifying distributions exceeding the federally mandated payout requirement by $548 million.

Report of Independent Accountants

To the Board of Trustees of the Ford Foundation:

In our opinion, the accompanying statements of financial position and the related statements of activities and cash flows present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of the Ford Foundation at September 30, 2001 and September 30, 2000, and the changes in net assets and its cash flows for the years then ended, in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America. These financial statements are the responsibility of the Ford Foundation's management; our responsibility is to express an opinion on these financial statements based on our audits. We conducted our audits of these statements in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America, which require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements, assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, and evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audits provide a reasonable basis for our opinion.

Note 1

Summary of Significant Accounting Policies

The financial statements of the Ford Foundation (the foundation) are prepared on the accrual basis. The significant accounting policies followed are set forth below:

Investments Equity and fixed income investments are generally valued based upon the final sales price as quoted on major exchanges. However, certain fixed income securities are valued based upon yields or prices of securities of comparable quality, coupon, maturity and type as well as indications as to values from brokers and dealers. Short-term investments generally represent securities with maturity of 1 year or less and are valued at amortized cost. Limited marketability investments, representing amounts in venture capital and equity partnerships, are valued at the quoted market price for securities for which market quotations are readily available or an estimate of value (fair value) as determined in good faith by the general partner. Events affecting the values of these limited marketability investments that occur between the time their prices are determined and the close of the foundation's fiscal year are reflected in the calculation of the fair value when the particular event significantly affects such net asset value.

Transactions are recorded on a trade date basis. Investment related receivables and payables are included in the accompanying statements of financial position as part of investments at fair value. Realized and unrealized gains or losses on investments are determined by comparison of specific costs of acquisition (identified lot basis) to proceeds at the time of disposal, or market values at the last day of the fiscal year, respectively, and include the effects of currency translation with respect to transactions and holdings of foreign securities. Dividends and interest are recognized when earned.

Cash Consists of cash on hand and operating bank deposits.

Program-Related Investments The foundation invests in projects that advance philanthropic purposes. These program-related investments are presented at net realizable value based on historical experience of these types of loans.

Fixed Assets Land, buildings, furniture, equipment and leasehold improvements owned by the foundation are recorded at cost. Depreciation is charged using the straight-line method based on estimated useful lives of the particular assets generally estimated as follows: buildings, principally 50 years, and furniture, equipment and leasehold improvements, 3 to 15 years.

Expenditures and Appropriations Grant expenditures are considered incurred at the time of approval by the President of the foundation. Uncommitted appropriations that have been approved by the Board of Trustees are included in appropriated unrestricted net assets.

Taxes The foundation qualifies as a tax-exempt organization under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code and, accordingly, is not subject to federal income taxes. However, the foundation is subject to a federal excise tax.

The foundation follows the policy of providing for federal excise taxes on net appreciation (both realized and unrealized) on investments. The deferred provision for federal excise tax represents taxes provided on net unrealized appreciation (depreciation) on investments.

Risks and Uncertainties The foundation uses estimates in preparing the financial statements in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles which requires management to make estimates and assumptions. Actual results may differ from these estimates. The most significant estimates and assumptions relate to valuation of limited marketable securities and allowances for possible losses on program-related investments.

Accounting for Derivative Instruments and Hedging Activities During 1998, the Financial Accounting Standards Board issued Statement No. 133, "Accounting for Derivative Instruments and Hedging Activities" ("FAS 133"), which requires the foundation to recognize all derivatives as either assets or liabilities in the statement of financial position at fair value. In addition, FAS 133 specifies the accounting for changes in the fair value of a derivative based on the intended use of the derivative and the resulting designation. The foundation adopted FAS 133 on October 1, 2000. The adoption has not had a significant impact on its statements of financial position and statements of activities.

Note 2 Investments

Investments held at September 30, were as follows:

	2001		2000
	Market Value (in thousands)	Cost	Market Value (in thousands)	Cost
Equities	$ 5,510,823	$4,787,258	$ 7,821,675	$4,725,718

Total	$10,652,139	$9,966,859	$14,497,996	$9,939,890

Included in investments at market are $174.0 million and $373.8 million of investment-related receivables and payables, respectively, in fiscal year 2001 and $144.2 million and $133.3 million in fiscal year 2000.

The foundation purchases and sells forward currency contracts whereby the foundation agrees to exchange one currency for another on an agreed-upon date at an agreed-upon exchange rate to minimize the exposure of certain of its investments to adverse fluctuations in currency markets. In addition, the foundation enters into exchange traded U.S. Treasury and UK Gilt futures contracts whereby the foundation agrees to deliver securities on an agreed-upon date at an agreed-upon market value for the sole purpose of reducing the interest rate risk. As of September 30, 2001 and 2000, the foundation had forward currency contracts with notional amounts totaling $60.0 million and $603.5 million, respectively, and U.S. Treasury and UK Gilt futures contracts with notional amounts of $0 million and $15.4 million, respectively. Such contracts involve, to varying degrees, risks of loss in excess of the amount recognized in the statements of financial position, arising either from potential changes in market prices and in the case of forward currency contracts from the possible inability of counterparties to meet the terms of their contracts. Changes in the value of forward currency contracts are recognized as unrealized gains or losses until such contracts are closed. Changes in the value of open futures contracts are recognized as realized gains or losses.

Note 4 Provision for Federal Excise Tax

The Internal Revenue Code imposes an excise tax on private foundations equal to 2 percent of net investment income (principally interest, dividends and net realized capital gains, less expenses incurred in the production of investment income). This tax is reduced to 1 percent for foundations that meet certain distribution requirements. In fiscal years 2001 and 2000, the foundation satisfied these requirements and is therefore eligible for the reduced tax. The provision for federal excise tax (based on a 1 percent rate in fiscal years 2001 and 2000) consists of a current provision on net investment income and a deferred provision based on net unrealized appreciation on investments. The amount of excise taxes paid was $11.5 million and $24.0 million in fiscal years 2001 and 2000, respectively.

Note 5 Retirement Plans

The foundation's defined benefit pension plan (the Cash Balance Retirement Plan) and the defined contribution plan (the Ford Foundation Retirement Plan) cover substantially all New York appointed employees (locally appointed staff are covered by other retirement arrangements). Pension benefits generally depend upon age, length of service and salary level. The foundation also provides retirees with at least five years of service and who are at least age 55 with nonpension postretirement benefits which include medical, dental and life insurance. The defined benefit pension plan is funded in accordance with the minimum funding requirements of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA). The nonpension postretirement benefits are not funded by the foundation.

The expense recorded by the foundation related to contributions to the defined contribution plan aggregated $4,522,000 and $4,284,000 for the years ended September 30, 2001 and 2000, respectively.

Note 6
Contingencies, Commitments and Guarantees

The foundation is involved in several legal actions. The foundation believes it has defenses for all such claims, believes the claims are substantially without merit, and is vigorously defending the actions. In the opinion of management, the final disposition of these matters will not have a material effect on the foundation's financial position.

As part of its program-related investment activities, the foundation has outstanding loan guarantees of $115,000 and is committed to provide $26,180,000 of loans to not-for-profit organizations once certain conditions are met. Further, as part of its investment management activity, the foundation is committed to additional funding of $677,363,000 in private equity commitments.

Guidelines for Grant Seekers

Grants and Program-Related Investments to Organizations

Before a request is made for a grant or program-related investment, a brief letter of inquiry is advisable to determine whether the foundation's present interests and funds permit consideration of the request.

The letter should include:

- ▶ The purpose of the project for which funds are being requested
- ▶ Problems and issues the proposed project will address
- ▶ Information about the organization conducting the project
- ▶ Estimated overall budget for the project
- ▶ Period of time for which funds are requested
- ▶ Qualifications of those who will be engaged in the project

After receiving the letter, foundation staff members may ask the grant seeker to submit a formal proposal. There is no grant application form. The proposal should include:

- ▶ The organization's current budget
- ▶ A description of the proposed work and how it will be conducted
- ▶ The names and curricula vitae of those engaged in the project
- ▶ A detailed project budget
- ▶ Present means of support and status of applications to other funding sources
- ▶ Legal and tax status

In some instances, the foundation requires the grantee organization to match the foundation's grant with funds from other sources.

The foundation supports pluralism and equal opportunity in its grant making and in its internal policies. The opportunities that prospective grantee organizations provide for minorities and women are considered in evaluating proposals.

Applications are considered throughout the year. Normally applicants may expect to receive within six weeks an indication of whether their proposals are within the foundation's program interests and budget limitations. Activities supported by grants and program-related investments must be charitable, educational or scientific, as defined under the appropriate provisions of the U.S. Internal Revenue Code and Treasury Regulations.

The foundation monitors grants through regular financial and narrative reports submitted by the grantee.

The foundation's funds are limited in relation to the great number of worthwhile proposals received. For example, in 2001 the foundation received about 40,000 grant requests and made 2,550 grants. Of that number, 22 percent were first-time grant recipients. The foundation directs its support to activities that are within its current interests and are likely to have wide effect. Support is not normally given for routine operating costs of institutions or for religious activities. Except in rare cases, funding is not available for the construction or maintenance of buildings.

Requests in the United States should be sent to:
Secretary

The Ford Foundation
320 East 43rd Street
New York, N.Y. 10017

or e-mailed to: Office-Secretary@fordfound.org.

Requests in foreign countries should be directed to the nearest foundation office. See inside front cover for locations of overseas offices. Requests for support of projects in Eastern and Central Europe should be sent to the foundation's New York headquarters.

Grants to Individuals

Most of the foundation's grant funds are given to organizations. Although it also makes grants to individuals, they are few in number relative to demand and are limited to research, training and other activities related to its program interests.

The foundation does not award undergraduate scholarships or make grants for purely personal needs. Support for graduate fellowships is generally provided through grants to universities and other organizations, which are responsible for the selection of recipients. Most foundation grants to individuals are awarded either through publicly announced competitions or on the basis of nominations from universities and other nonprofit institutions. In all cases, recipients are selected on the merits of their proposals and on their potential contribution to advancing the foundation's program objectives.

Cover: "Sun, Sea and Sand," a mixed-media installation by Yinka Shonibare, a London-based Nigerian artist. The work is featured in "Authentic/Ex-Centric: Conceptualism in Contemporary Art," by Salah M. Hassan and Olu Oguibe, the companion publication for an exhibit of works by African artists appearing at the 49th Venice Biennale in 2001.

The book and exhibit, co-curated by Hassan and Oguibe, were developed by the Forum for African Arts, a Ford Foundation grantee based at Cornell University. "Authentic/Ex-Centric" was the first pan-African exhibit ever to appear at the biennale, one of the most prestigious art events in the world.

Communications

In pursuit of its mission around the world, the Ford Foundation's grant-making activity generates ideas as well as social change. The list is long—an examination of the U.S. military's successful approach to child care; a Russian human rights group's efforts to capture the country's troubled 20th century history by encouraging teenagers to write essays based on interviews with their grandparents; the promotion of puppetry as a serious art form for adults; international attempts to stem trafficking in small arms. The Office of Communications' central goal is to make sure the best of these ideas are widely shared.

In this regard, the office publishes a quarterly magazine, the Ford Foundation Report, which takes a journalistic approach to issues and events related to the foundation and its grantees. The office also produces the foundation's award-winning annual report and works with the program staff to produce a variety of publications related to individual programs and areas of grant making.

All this is available on the foundation's rapidly growing Web site at www.fordfound.org, along with highlights of major foundation program initiatives, news announcements, guidelines for grant seekers, information on the foundation's overseas offices and listings of recent grants.

In the past few years, the office has expanded its strategic communications role, serving as a resource for program officers seeking broader public awareness of major foundation-funded programs and the issues they address as well as the results of their work. To this end, the office helps develop communications plans, organizes news media events and maintains relationships with interested reporters and editors.
